Editorial

It is often said that literature echoes life. No literature has been produced without reflecting life. Ancient, Medieval or Modern literature resonated the life of the concerned age. Literature gives momentum not only to life but also thinking pattern. It shapes the culture and tradition of the concerned. It gives voice to the voiceless. Moreover, it gives strength to the weak. On the whole literature makes the unheard heard.

Left alone without critical intrusion, there is always a fear of literature getting edgeless. Critical analysis adds new dimensions to literary thinking. Research done on literary works validates the strengths and weaknesses of such works. The beauty of any literary work is that it allows the researcher to enter the text from any point of view.

Similar attempt is made here in this collection of essays named “Literary Echoes”. The researchers have contributed articles on various topics with serious research. These articles, it is believed, will throw more light on the works researched on by the contributors and that exactly is the intension of bringing out this collection of articles in the form of a book titled “Literary Echoes”.
